Descending the jagged, pitted and river of lava from its mountain source to the sea. pinnacled sides over deep and yawning fissures, we came in sight of the cocoa-palm grove of Kiho-The mountain side is rent, and the great red fountain pours, rushing forth with a thunder-voice lo. Here the lava current had parted, and a portion had flowed off toward the base of the highthat jars the earth and shakes the heavens. 'Tis lands, and left a few coconnut and hau trees night, and a wild, demoniacal glare lights up the standing, and a long peninsula of grass, studded darkness. Over the lurid flame a dense column of dark smoke ascends on high, and spreads and shakes afar its terrible wings of desolation, lit by sands and past the stone church, we reined up at the unearthy glare below. On sweeps the great a halepili on the margin of the calm and beautiful river in blaxing cataracts down the trembling little bay formed by the lava flow. The evening breeze scarce rippled the quiet mountain side. Widening out a lengue broad, waters; the sun set gloriously and a roseate glow on it irresistibly sweeps, great rocks, giant bouldrested on the far summit of Haleakala, which ers, and even hills, are borne onward in the surgit z tide, or melt, lost in the fiery vortex. The forest, marked with scarce a wreath of smoke, withers as a scroll. Now glowing and grandly towered up apparently almost in front of us. The sweet young moon beamed down upon me like the love-lit eye of a Chinese maiden on a Mandarin, the waves sang a lullaby on the coral win shore, as I enjoyed the luxury of rest. Several flashing on the brink of a precipice, it seems to rashers of smoked salmon, broiled on the coals, pause in mad frenzy, and then makes a terrific goat's milk, gave me an appetite for sleep. I leap below. Through the tortured air plunges was soon in the land ofdreams-visions of horror the grand flery mass, and falls scorehing, seethpassed over me. I was traveling over vast fields ing, melting, with an unearthly jarring roar on of torn, contorted and ragged lava glowing with the rocks below. Now bubbling up in fiery jet, a white heat, while over its surface my steed went limping and flinching with unshed and and funtastic whirlpools, it rushes on. The elecbleeding feet. In the far distance the shades of tric current, with its aurora-glow, flashes, sparkles, leaps and plays above the mighty mass. A dition, half hid in wreathes of sulphury smoke; a baleful, sulphurous stench fills the air. The glowing red horse-shoe was branded on the forebeasts rush frantic over the plain or are lost in head of each, and an inscription more glowing and terrific than the hand writing on the wall, the rushing wave. The birds scream frightened blazed along the awful gloom, in these wordsthrough the air, or fall suffocated in the mighty "Emigrate to Waimea, you recreant disciples of current. Man, mad with terror, flies frantically St. Vulcan! or loaf, tantalized forever, outside the wails of heaven !" Then the scene changed. from his home, or with white lips mutters a pray-My stomach appeared the dry bed of a mountainer to Pele. lake, converted into a burning desert by fiery vol-On the mad tide sweeps, gaining breadth and canic throes, and on its heat-glowing surface was volocity as it goes. Now it approaches the broad a Necropolis of parched salmon. Then my mouth mountain ridge of Puanahulu and surges thunappeared a vast reservoir, and over my lip poured deringly against its trembling sides. And now, Ningara in rushing cataract into the parched desert below. I was awakened by the roar of the waters, and found myself draining the last drop of water from my kerosene can. I then resorted to the pool of brackish water near by, which only seemed to aggravate my thirst, and I came to the like a great river approaching the sea, it parts in several branches to flow through its delta. It cannot remove or overleap the mountain-barrier, and it parts to the right and left. Grandly the Rosetta branch sweeps round the base of a round green spur of the ridge, while a middle branch rushes roaring through a rocky gorge, foaming, boiling with terrific violence, a torrent of liquid fire. Earth cries out in a smothered wail of agony as the fiery currents scorch her breast. A dense seething, hissing, crackling sound, with a dull confused roar, fills the agitated air. Away toward the base of Hualalai, the Damietta branch of the great fiery Nile flows. Now the fiery currents lap and quiver on the brink of the lower Sales Room on Queen Street, one door trom mountain bench and then madly leap in broad eataracts of flame into the plain. Then broadening out with red, majestic, fiery grandeur, they sweep toward the sea. Glowing and flashing, the broad, rushing river of flame, fifty feet deep, comes thundering and surging.

Onward, as irresistible as destiny, sweeps the red-glowing liquid wall on to the ocean's black, shingly beach. Then, like a great dragon in fiery coil, darting forth its thousand tongues of flame, with one wild leap it bounds into the "yeast of waves." The agonized waters dash wave upon wave on the red torrent, which beats them back far out. Madly they roll backward as the flaming tongues of fire flash into the deep ocean caverns and coral caves. Now the deep, gathering force from the repelling surges of red lava waves, comes combing on with a thundervoiced surf, like a vast crystal mountain lit by an unearthly glare, and bursts with a terrific onslaught on the fiery flow, that augmenting, rolls to meet it. Dense columns of steam roll upward as fiery waves still chase each other on and plunge into ocean's depths beneath. Now the most fantastic and horrific forms appear, whirling in eddying dance, as the waves of fire and ocean meet and wreathe and circle and lap each other in fiery, vapory coil. Demons wild, gorgons dire, leap from wave of flame to wave of ocean, as the fiery current blazes along the coral reefs and the chafing waters roll back with the glow of a red heat, lighting the vapory wreaths that whirl up and fall in hissing showers on the burning tide.

Now rises from sea to sky the wild shrick of tortured waters, the terrific wail of Pele's smothering fires! The cooling lava's erashing thunderbursts, the steam hissing through the quivering, tortured air, a deep confused jarring roar, with the crackling, rushing sweep of the wide river of fire, all combine in a sound of deep, terrific awe and make the earth tremble as a coward, while hell's sulphury banner, lit up with pale yellow glare, hangs as a funeral pall from the pillars of

Far up the base of Hualalai the Canopic branch surges and forms a mountain 2000 feet high, which glows in mockery of the extinct cone, and there turning down a deep chasm, at a sharp angle, rushes precipitately into the sea in the direction of Kailga. Grand, indeed, is the prospect, yet it gives man but a faint idea of the grand volcanic action on this planet, in the cycles of the past, before it was prepared for the existence of life.

But I could delay no longer. Reality found me in the lava flow and forced upon me the necessity of getting over it with my shockes steed, In New Stone Store, Nunnua St., below King. flinching at every step. I toiled across the first branch, and came to an old lava flow with a bituminous surface and a glass-like glitter. It appeured as though a lake of bitumen, heaved and Kesp constantly so has a full assortment of merchandise, for rolled into billows, had suddenly became fixed and the supply of Whalers and Merchand vessels. hardened.
